

STANDARD INDUSTRIAL CLASSIFICATION

1. This is a reconciliation of the Standard Industrial Classification Revised 1980 (SIC(R)) and the Standard Industrial Classification Revised 1968 (SIC(1968)).
2. SIC(R) has a different structure from the SIC(1968) which had 27 orders, each divided into a number of Minimum List Headings (MLH). The SIC(R) has 10 Divisions, 60 Classes, 222 Groups and 334 Activity Headings.
3. Some of the other major differences between SIC(R) and SIC(1968) are:
 - a. The prominence accorded to energy producing industries which are grouped, together with the water supply industry, in a self contained Division early in the classification.
 - b. Slaughtering which is included within food manufacturing instead of with wholesale distribution.
 - c. Man-made fibres production is included as a class adjacent to the chemical industry instead of with the textile industry.
 - d. The revised classification draws a distinction, where possible, between principals and agents. This is apparent in the distributive trades and in financial services. In distribution, agents are classified separately from wholesalers who own the goods in which they deal. Similarly, in the financial field, a distinction is made between the insurance companies, which actually carry the risks, and insurance brokers or agents and between financial institutions, such as banks, building societies or investment companies, and such services as stockbroking or dealing in foreign exchange.
 - e. Open-cast coal mining is included with other coal mining, previously it was classified with the construction industry.
 - f. The manufacture of agricultural tractors is classified with that of agricultural machinery. Previously it was classified with vehicle manufacturing.
 - g. Marine engineering is included with mechanical engineering separate from shipbuilding and ship repairing.
 - h. The manufacture of office machinery and data processing equipment is represented by two activity heading in a separate class following mechanical engineering. Previously office machinery was classified to mechanical engineering and electronic data processing equipment to electrical engineering.
