PREFACE

The index within the main volume of the revised 1992 Standard Industrial Classification of economic activities [SIC(92)] shows where the activities actually described in the explanatory notes can be found in the text. The aim of this volume is to provide a list of typical activities (or sometimes products) for each class or subclass of SIC(92). Also a further index is provided of the classes or subclasses under which different activities appear in the classification. As a guide, certain proper names have been included in the indexes but it must be remembered that SIC(92) is about classification by activity, so classification must depend upon the principal activity of the body concerned.

It is also important to remember that classification usually concerns the statistical unit. So, for example, when a transport section of a manufacturing firm is a separate statistical unit, it will be classified to transport (division 60, group 60.2) but when it is an integral part of the main firm (ie an ancillary activity) then it will be classified to whatever is the principal activity of that firm.

The first part, the numerical index, lists each class and subclass of SIC(92) followed by a list of activities included within that heading. These lists are based on various indexes used for SIC(80) and the explanatory notes to SIC(92).

In the second part the activities have been arranged in alphabetical order. Alongside each is the heading to which the activity is classified. The activities may be known under different names and some activities have been classified in the alphabetical index under several alternative titles but it has obviously not been possible to list all variations. These alternatives are also listed within the numerical index.

To assist users of the classification, both indexes also include references to the Standard Industrial Classification

Revised 1980. In some cases reference could only be made to class or group level but in most cases reference is to the activity heading level. Wherever possible obsolete references from earlier editions have been deleted but by their very nature there is now less information about such activities. It should also be noted that the SIC(80) references could not always be applied to the SIC(92) activities and vice versa. In other cases an activity that could be coded in SIC(80) could not be fully coded in SIC(92) without further information. Nevertheless an attempt has been made to add SIC(80) references as often as possible but this should not be assumed to be definitive coding of SIC(80).

Unlike the 1980 indexes, it has not been necessary to include references to the revised General Industrial Classification of Economic Activities within the European Communities (NACE Rev 1) because the structures of the new SIC and the new NACE are identical down to the four digit level. NACE Rev 1 presently lacks a comprehensive index so these references are, therefore, the Central Statistical Office's interpretation of that classification.

Thanks are due to the Employment Department and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for their contributions and particularly to the Institute of Employment Research at the University of Warwick for their help in completing these indexes. However, any information about errors or omissions should be sent to the CSO.
